"It's great for those smaller areas, like between your fingers. It's great around your eyes and to blend out your tan in that small area between your hand and your palm, that's an area that can easily get a little choppy. That brush would help smoothen out that gloss."

"Yes, you can use a makeup brush to contour, adding a little definition on your face. So, if you finesse, wherever that would be is, contour that area with some powder and leave the makeup brush. It's also great for containing the face. Just use that little bit of excess product yes have left over make it into an instant or your cheekbones, around your forehead, and you can bring it down to your neck under your chin. You can also create some 82, adding some definition to your pelvic areas."
