In 2023, the Beauty & Personal Care industry demonstrated resilience, as consumers embraced small indulgences, self-expression, and self-care amidst a cost-conscious environment.
Beauty and Personal Care Brands Evaluate & Prioritize in 2023

Shoppers Balance Saving & Splurging

Despite some trade-down behaviors and growth of ‘dupes’, prestige BPC products still have a place in consumer demand. Consumers are embracing a “treat” mindset within their BPC routines, especially as many cut back on bigger ticket expenses in their lives.

BPC Brands as Holistic Health Enhancers

The melding of wellness and beauty will become more pronounced as consumers use their BPC routines to support their physical, mental, & emotional wellbeing. Brands continue to consider shoppers’ desire for clean, natural, multifunctional, and preventive offerings.

Definition of Diversity Continues to Evolve

Industry players are being challenged to expand beauty norms to be more inclusive. There is consumer desire to see BPC offerings that cater to evolving needs like being ethnically-inclusive, gender-neutral, and/or tailored to personal requirements (abilities, life stages etc.).

Drumming Up Demand Across Channels

Brands are re-evaluating distribution strategies to expand consumer visibility and accessibility. Preference for omnichannel shopping is expected to fuel legacy brands’ shift to online and independent brands’ move to brick-and-mortar presence.
BRANDS ACROSS BEAUTY & PERSONAL CARE SUB-CATEGORIES ARE Navigating New Consumer Demands & Routines

Haircare
A growing focus on hair health is fueling a ‘skinification’ of the category, positioning haircare as a bright spot within BPC. Prestige is a growth area as consumers experiment with overall hair care routines. Exploration of supplements, oils, and natural options will likely continue to grow.

- 60% of adults are paying more attention to hair health this year vs. one-year ago.²

Skincare
Skincare has broadened to become skin health, as many take a more preventative and protective approach. Offerings that contain health-inspired, clean, & recognizable ingredients continue to gain traction, as ingredients once reserved for premium skincare make their way to mass markets.

- 62% of category users prefer to invest in their facial skincare routine more than in other personal care items.²

Personal Hygiene
A post-pandemic growth area, personal hygiene has evolved from a functional category to a cornerstone of self-care routines. Brands have an opportunity to tap into consumer prioritization of health and appearance by promoting ingredients, category innovations, and multifunctional benefits.

- 35% of body care users indicate they are paying more attention to the ingredients in their body care products than they were a year ago.³

Cosmetics
Price increases are prompting some category trade-down behavior, but prestige is trending upwards as many shoppers see cosmetics as an affordable luxury. Clean, inclusive, and multi-functional offerings will likely fuel category innovation.

- >40% of lipstick and lip gloss users said that their most recent purchase of a lip product was an impulse one.⁴

Fragrance
An inherently ‘prestige’ category, fragrance has benefitted from some shoppers embracing an affordable luxury mindset as well as the category’s growing association with wellness.

- $3.5B Projected 2023 U.S. prestige fragrance market in 2023 (+2.61% CAGR 2023-2028).⁵

MARKETPLACE PARTNERSHIP EXAMPLES

How BPC Brands Are Evolving Their Media Strategy & Storytelling

Promoting Inclusive Storytelling
Nivea launched Skin Out Loud, an inclusive five-episode video series featuring people from different walks of life talking about ageing, identity, confidence, and their skin care routines.

Leaning on Social Influencers
Neutrogena partnered with reality dating show contestants and social media influencers to launch its TikTok “Hydro House” Reality Dating Show, spotlighting its Hydro Boost facial cleanser.

Launching Brand Partnerships
Mielle, a Black-founded and women-led beauty brand, announced a multi-year partnership with the WNBA, kicking off at the All-Star Game in Las Vegas, that makes it the Official Textured Hair Care partner of the league.

Experimenting in the Metaverse
Urban Decay hosted its first-ever metaverse make-up launch party on gaming platform, Roblox. This Eye-Con event enabled users to try on limited edition virtual make-up looks.
Looking Ahead

KEY INDUSTRY TRENDS TO WATCH
LOOKING AHEAD

Key BPC Trends & Emerging Sub-Categories We Expect to Influence Marketing & Media Strategies

- A Shift to Conscious Consumption
- “Cleanical” to Become the Norm
- A Continuously Reimagined BPC Experience
- BPCs Pursue “As Seen on Screen” Inspiration
- Seeking Connection with All Communities
- Emerging Sub-Categories & Brands: Beauty Devices, Clean Beauty, & Fragrances
A Shift to Conscious Consumption

Consumers become more mindful of the impact of BPC products on themselves and the environment.

More than half of BPC consumers believe sustainability trumps quality and would be willing to convert from their currently used products to an ESG-focused brand.1

Without industry standardization, brands are exploring ways to communicate credibility around multifunctional benefits, clean offerings, reusable packaging, ingredient transparency etc.

‘Value’ Extends Beyond Price

74% of beauty consumers are trying to use fewer products to be more sustainable1

65% of color cosmetics users prefer multifunctional makeup2

43% of both male and female consumers expressed interest in trying refillable containers for their BPC products3

Brands Cater to Multifunctional & Climate-Positive Demands

Kérastase: Reusable and refillable bottles

MAC: Liquid foundation formula with 80% skin serum base

bluemercury: The “Conscious Beauty Edit” 14-piece clean product set

codex: Sustainable ingredient sourcing & plant-based packaging

“Cleanical” to Become the Norm

In the pursuit of clean beauty, consumers no longer take brand and product claims at face value.

Consumers are more informed and conscientious, leading to many seeking proof before purchase.

In response, some BPC brands are taking a science-led approach and attempting to build trust through ingredient transparency and partnerships with dermatologists & cosmetic chemists (the new “skinfluencers”).

Cerave’s dermatologist influencer strategy shows growth of experts as creators.

Paula’s Choice launches ingredient checker to address skin care misinformation.

Coty relaunches Philosophy brand, with a new brand formulation principle, Dermatologic Wisdom.

>40% of BPC consumers agree that brands need to do a better job at explaining what ingredients they use and why.

>1/3 of BPC users say they’d be willing to pay more for products that use scientifically proven and/or medical grade ingredients.

+29% YoY sales growth in L’Oréal Group’s dermatological skin care category, the biggest leap across all categories.

A Continuously Reimagined BPC Experience

BPC brands experiment with online and offline touchpoints and formats, in a bid to balance scale and personalization.

A preference for omnichannel shopping is fueling legacy brands’ shift online and DTC brands’ move into the brick-and-mortar space.

Additionally, the rise of innovative experiences like livestreaming, AR/VR, and gaming is prompting brands to consider how to best create experiences that influence discovery, engagement, and purchase.

DTC brand, Function of Beauty, launches exclusive Sephora Collection in 2023 to be available in stores.¹

L’Oréal partnered with Sitecore to develop a consistent brand experience across 400 websites.²

Laneige debuted its first virtual store, with videos, gamification, and easy checkout.³

Clinique hosted an in-person experience at Coachella where festivalgoers could socialize, enjoy product offerings, and immersive installations.⁴
BPCs Pursue “As Seen on Screen” Inspiration

As shoppers seek BPC inspiration, brands turn to influencers and social tactics to provide recommendations, create community, and prompt purchase.

61% of consumers trust influencer recommendations. ¹

Brands are increasingly considering influencer partnerships to build credibility and create connection. As brands balance the goals of driving reach but also catering to niche audiences, the definition of “influencer” may vary and include celebrities, brand ambassadors, social media stars etc.

Seeking Connection with All Communities

Brands continue to explore ways to make the BPC community one where everyone feels like they belong.

Consumers are seeking inclusive brands that go beyond traditional perceptions and ideals, and instead, deliver on diverse BPC needs across gender, race, age, other personal care requirements.

In addition to product development, brands are prioritizing inclusive marketing and technology to champion a ‘beauty for all’ ethos.
